Editorial

This issue of Media in Action highlights two topics, each of them examined from a range of diverse perspectives. The first is a thematic focus is on “Socio-Informatics”. Socio-Informatics is an IT design discipline, which combines qualitative, praxeological research with design methods. In this section, four articles elaborate different viewpoints on methodological issues against the backgrounds of their specific research and design contexts. The second section brings together five essays as a book review symposium to Charles Goodwin’s latest book publication “Co-operative Action”, paying tribute to the lifetime achievements of the recently deceased author.

The editorial team wishes you a pleasant read!
